Lost US WWII Submarine USS S-28 Discovered Off Hawaii

New York, NY USA, December 21, 2017 (Newswire.com) - Award winning explorer and underwater robotics expert

Tim Taylor, President and CEO of Tiburon Subsea has discovered WWII Submarine USS S-28 (SS-131).

The S-28 is considered the most important lost US WWII vessel in the central Pacific according to the former director of the United States National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). Outside Magazine included the USS S-28 in their feature article as one of the top ten iconic missing ships waiting to be discovered.

The USS S-28 sank on July 4th 1944 and was found in 2650 meters (8700 feet) of water off the coast of Oahu, Hawaii with her entombed crew of 49 US sailors.

The current mapping and filming of the wreck by the discovery team is yielding valuable information that can help determine and possibly solve the cause of the sinking. The data collected on this expedition is being shared with the US Navy Heritage Command. It is also important to share this news with the family members of the entombed sailors and we encourage direct family members to contact us at info@tiburonsubsea.com.

"Top ten iconic and mysterious shipwrecks yet discovered" NOAA Director - Outside Magazine March 2017 Outside Magazine asked NOAA's Director of Underwater Archaeology to help sort through the million lost ships and compile this list of the ten most iconic missing ships waiting to be discovered. The USS S-28 was one of the top ten.
